Biography

Meghan Anand advises clients on a range of international trade and investment matters, including economic sanctions, export controls, foreign investment reviews, and international arbitration. She combines legal analysis with a background in technology to help clients achieve results amid an evolving regulatory landscape.

Leveraging her background in computer science and emerging technology, Meghan helps clients comply with international trade laws, including the Export Administration Regulations, the International Trafficking in Arms Regulations, and the sanctions regulations administered by the Office of Foreign Assets Control. Meghan also advises clients on matters involving the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States, domestic and international space laws, and international investment law. Meghan maintains an active pro bono practice, working mainly on asylum and environmental cases.

During law school, she worked at the National Security Division of the U.S. Department of Justice, the Office of the Legal Advisor at the U.S. Department of State, and the Stanford Institute for Human-Centered AI, and received the Chao-Fujioka International Law Scholarship and Salzburg-Cutler International Law fellowship for her research in public international law. While in law school, she also served as the Online Projects Editor of the Stanford Law Review, the Managing Editor of the Stanford Journal of
