

Kevin R. Burke

Partner
Denver

Biography

As a partner in the Corporate & Finance practice group, Kevin Burke strongly believes in taking a practical and commercially focused approach to transactional matters of all types, helping to get the deal done while protecting his clients' interests and minimizing their risks. And, with a finance background, he's not afraid of a balance sheet or a complex working capital adjustment.

Kevin's practice covers a wide range of corporate and transactional matters, with a focus on private equity, mergers and acquisitions, divestitures, joint ventures, securities and capital raising transactions, and corporate governance matters across a wide variety of industries. He is well-versed in international affairs, having handled cross-border transactions in many countries, including Canada, the United Kingdom, Hong Kong, China, Switzerland, Mexico, and throughout the EU.

Prior to joining Hogan Lovells, Kevin worked in the Washington, D.C. office of another leading international law firm, where he concentrated on corporate matters. Before attending law school, Kevin was a consultant for an international public accounting firm focusing on valuation and corporate appraisals for transactional and financial reporting purposes. He has completed Level I of the CFA Program.
