

Bankrupt brands can't revoke trademark licenses, says SCOTUS

30 May 2019

LimeGreen IP News

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that bankrupt trademark licensors cannot use federal bankruptcy law to rescind the rights of their trademark licensees to continue use of duly licensed trademarks.

The decision settles a long-simmering circuit split on a question that the International Trademark Association has labeled "the most significant unresolved legal issue in trademark licensing."

Read More: Bankrupt brands can't revoke trademark licenses, says SCOTUS

Contacts

Anna Kurian
Shaw

Partner

Brendan C.
Quinn

Senior Associate

> Read the full article online