

What's new for interactive electronic signing in 2021?

10 March 2021

In response to the ongoing pandemic, many federal agencies and state legislatures have revised their rules to allow for broader utilization of online solutions to remotely conduct business.

This is opening up adoption of electronic signature and interactive signing technologies for a growing number of use cases – making it easier and more secure to approve business documents from anywhere – such as electronic authorizations for corporate SEC filings, additional tax documents and remote online notarizations. However, these changes are happening on an agency by agency, or state by state basis – some temporarily and some more permanently.

In this podcast, Michael Scheimer, James Denvil, and Jamie Wickett discuss some of the most relevant state and federal agency changes in 2020 impacting the use of electronic signatures, and more.
